Public adjusters, contractors knocking on doors post-Hurricane Ian, homeowners say

By: Stassy Olmos

LEE COUNTY, Fla. — Southwest Florida homeowners say hundreds of public adjusters and contractors have been knocking on their doors asking to help with insurance claims after Hurricane Ian.

The Insurance Information Institute said natural disasters like this attract scammers looking to take advantage of people when they're most vulnerable.

“They're out here like vultures, you know, and they are taking advantage of everybody,” Cape Coral Homeowner Ron Scalzo told ABC Action News. “As you can see, we've got a lot of wind damage because the eye of the storm ran right parallel to us,” he said, showing us the tree debris lining his street.

As soon as the hurricane passed, he went outside to start cleaning the debris in his neighborhood.

“The most disturbing thing was within half an hour of us just starting to clean up to get to our cars, we had 40, 50 public adjusters running through the neighborhood talking about how they could do our claims for us... they could handle it for us, it's what they do," he said.
